

The Santa Fe Homeless Backpack Project

Part of the Global Homeless Backpack Network

www.HomelessBackpack.net

This is my version of a project taking root in the U.S. and around the world. In 2013 I was inspired by the Tacoma, Washington couple who posted a video about it on YouTube.com, entitled “Homeless Backpack Care Kit”.

The Concept:

To fill backpacks to be given away to homeless people or others in need, for free, which contain basic living and survival items. Examples of the kinds of things included are:

- A few specialized clothing items - watch caps, gloves, socks, etc.
- Survival gear - duct tape, emergency ‘space’ blankets, hand warmers, etc.
- Hygiene items - toothbrush, toothpaste, soap, deodorant, hairbrush, etc.
- Food - eating utensils, cans of food, power bars, bottled water, etc.

In Practice:

All of the above plus much more (the full below) is packed in a medium-sized, nondescript backpack and given, for free, to those in need who I meet along the way. I keep backpacks in my car at all times to offer to anyone who is obviously lacking. There is no proselytization or even a requirement for the receivers to interact. Social intercourse is often difficult for people in dire straits and this should not disqualify them from receiving a pack. I simply explain that it is a totally free gift and contains good, useable stuff which they can keep or pass on, no strings attached. Not everyone opts to take one but once they do, I don't hang around to monitor what they do with it. Respectfully, I give them their space and go on my way. On the occasions I have received feedback, it has been very gratifying.

Personal safety and self-respect are two things which dominate the lives of the disadvantaged. Homeless people must remain inconspicuous in order to survive in society and in places like hostels and shelters. Bright, showy or expensive items will be stolen or could cause worse trouble for them. Consequently, the packs and contents must be of subdued colors and look as much like street fare as possible while still being practical and of good quality.

Self-respect is probably the most important gift we can give them. This means no junk in our packs. While they have to be made inexpensively, it's important to take time to find and choose the best quality items we can afford, items which will not break, which will do their job and not disappoint. The original Tacoma homeless backpack project's target cost per pack was $20 total, including the (used) pack. My cost is probably closer to $35 and I am happy with that. I've expanded the original item list and I make sure each item is serviceable even if it has to cost a little more.

Your Assistance:

I fund this project myself and am happy doing this. I can invest in it a few dollars at a time until I have enough to make a few packs. There are a some upgrades I hope to add to the packs in the future and those will come in their time.

Occasionally, some friends have generously offered to help with this which gave me the idea that the whole thing could move along more quickly if more people were involved. I am starting an Internet campaign to raise money to expand HomelessBackpack.net as a hub site for homeless backpack projects all over the U.S. and the world. Please watch our site for news updates on our funding campaign.

As winter is setting in, these packs are even more valuable to those without homes, many of whom are sleeping outside. I'd like to get as many packs as possible out there this winter so I'm inviting anyone who would like to help to do so. Here's how:

Give money: I'm not a registered charity or an LLC so I can't give you tax deductible receipts for this but we now have the capability of accepting donations on the website (and you will receive a receipt). Please visit the 'Donate' page on HomelessBackpack.net. This is the best way to help as it gives me the flexibility to buy things when they are on sale.

Give backpacks: The other way you can help is to donate any usable backpacks you may not be using to the project. The backpacks are the most important single item we can give people who are on the street. They are their homes and need to be sturdy and reliable. If you go to the 'Donate' page on the website, there is information on how you can send us backpacks and thank you in advance.

Note: Please don't send me things which are on the list without contacting me first. It's taken some time to come up with a concise pack list which works for everyone and obviously, space is limited. If you have any questions about anything, of course, contact me.

So, that's the story. I appreciate all the help my friends have offered to this point. Having had some experience with homelessness, I know that small things can mean a lot to people on the edge and just the idea that somebody has taken the time to care and treat them with kindness can make a big difference in someone's day.

Best of everything,

David Goldberg
